I'm fearful that we are at a stage where the very next thing that may occur is Rob once again putting me in a situation where I have to make an impossible choice to try and ransom another, but the only benefit he can gain would be to still make that not enough so I can be blamed for his choice to not make good on his side of the deal....

The only way to prove me wrong is to be smart enough to accept and use my analysis. He can then enjoy the ambiguity of maybe I ended up successful and it has nothing to do with him; or that he never did all the things I said

He keeps going down the discredit, optics path - well I've ensured the hard work was done at the beginning - which is why that pathway is not fruitful

If I can't make Rob stop indulging his addiction to me, and Rob can't control himself in that addiction, my best outcome is from using his addiction to control him

If Rob would rather not listen to good advise I give him, and I'm smart enough to find the right answer to him and say it out loud, an he would rather do anything but what I say, I can make him make suboptimal to terrible decisions for him

Rob will always have these P0s (priority zero)

His prestige, his influence economic power, his reputation, the redeeming of his mother's reputation from Enron. He wants to go down in history. He would prefer as president but he would probably be OK with a notorious monster. He can't be a notorious monster because that would threaten too many other people with power, money or influence.

P1s: not being seen as a looser or the dirty addict he is, for me to be proved right and therefore him not being seen as smarter then me

P2s: indulging his addiction and his self delusion that he cannot be controlled, or made to stop, or can get away with anything he wants

This is why the long term strategy is always threaten the first priority to drop off the list: his narcissistic delusion of being able to get away with anything by doing things you can to prevent him from getting away with it

This is why attacking P2 is what fixes all the rest of the problems

So here's how this ends:

Rob's life is made worse when he makes my life worse. Rob had the highest levels of influence and prestige starting in 2022-2025 when I did best in my life. At this time he was most impeded from doing harm to me (but he fell back into his addiction and ruined it). If he continues the trend and path and my life hopes the way that was narrated over a decade ago, then that will bolster my credibility and he's going down, as well as anyone he has blackmail material on. That's a lot of people who want to not have that happen to themselves. That's why no matter how much people may not care about my outcome for my sake or even want to see me suffer, their desire to not suffer is more important to themselves. That's why without a legal contract or fair settlement, removing his access and influence in my life specifically, the putting right the things I deserved, the making sure I look not like an easy target to him, is the only path where an investigation, a murder charge, and all the others don't occur. He's a dirty little addict and I'm his drug. He cannot control himself even when it's destroying his life. Enabling that dirty little addict (this is funny because it's what he attempts to paint me as, as he has to countless others like Alex and more) is the thin he's most ashamed of, I'd suppose because of his biological father. Anyone who's a friend or family member to him will again remove his temptations from him if they can't put him in a rehab, an institution or a prison like he deserves

The best way to stop Rob from destroying your life is to help him stop destroying his own... that means a perverse incentive exists for so many people to bolster my credibility, my influence, my economic impact - because the less he thinks he will get away with it the less he ends up trying too - and actually making it worse for himself

 Rick Mark  · 10w ·  Author

Because we showed one thing for sure - buying a verdict is exactly the wrong thing and was the worst choice in his life. If he had settled his behavior that week privately - and the filings were removed, he would have done better

Very simply - Friday I shared the truth of what happens in my life. I got some McDonalds Saturday morning. I fell asleep. And once again an assault played out with the "before" and "after" being obscured - but how many times can that keep happening before being able to stay alive long enough to show how it happens and why (buying time by the day) is understood

Rick Mark

But because he's a coward -
I'll likely not survive the next assault....

Rob's Tactics...

- * Appeal to spite – generating bitterness or hostility in the listener toward an opponent in an argument. - Screw Rick
- * Appeal to flattery – using excessive or insincere praise to obtain common agreement - You deserve what you have
- * Appeal to tradition (argumentum ad antiquitatem) – a conclusion supported solely because it has long been held to be true - Being Gay is the problem
- * Appeal to wealth (argumentum ad crumenam) – supporting a conclusion because the arguer is wealthy - I can get away with it / I can pay for it
- * Appeal to emotion – manipulating the emotions of the listener rather than using valid reasoning to obtain common agreement - Blame Rick
- * Ad hominem – attacking the arguer instead of the argument. - Rick did X
- * Appeal to motive – dismissing an idea by questioning the motives of its proposer. - It's wrong because Rick would benefit
- * Argument from ignorance (appeal to ignorance, argumentum ad ignorantiam) – assuming that a claim is true because it has not been or cannot be proven false, or vice versa - How could you know X so you did nothing wrong / It's Rick's fault for not knowing
- * Argument from incredulity (appeal to common sense) – "I cannot imagine how this could be true; therefore, it must be false." - No one believes Rick / I don't believe Rick / I believe Rob
- * Argument from repetition (argumentum ad nauseam or argumentum ad infinitum) – repeating an argument until nobody cares to discuss it any more and referencing that lack of objection as evidence of support for the truth of the conclusion; sometimes confused with proof by assertion. - It's Rick's XXX over and over confused with proof by assertion. - it's Rick's XXX over and over

* Argument from silence (argumentum ex silentio) – assuming that a claim is true based on the absence of textual or spoken evidence from an authoritative source, or vice versa. - Rick didn't defend or answer so he is guilty

* Affirming a disjunct – concluding that one disjunct of a logical disjunction must be false because the other disjunct is true; A or B; A, therefore not B. - Because Rick doesn't have the answer, I must have the answer

* Affirming the consequent – the antecedent in an indicative conditional is claimed to be true because the consequent is true; if A, then B; B, therefore A - This happened because Rick did X when Rob waited for Rick to be blamed

* Denying the antecedent – the consequent in an indicative conditional is claimed to be false because the antecedent is false; if A, then B; not A, therefore not B - This was what caused you or Rob to do X because it was a justifiable

* Argument from incredulity – when someone can't imagine something to be true, and therefore deems it false, or conversely, holds that it must be true because they can't see how it could be false. - No one believes Rick so he must be wrong

* Argument to moderation (false compromise, middle ground, fallacy of the mean, argumentum ad temperantiam) – assuming that a compromise between two positions is always correct - Rick should compromise on matters like if murder should be prosecuted

* Continuum fallacy (fallacy of the beard, line-drawing fallacy, sorites fallacy, fallacy of the heap, bald man fallacy, decision-point fallacy) – improperly rejecting a claim for being imprecise - Rick went one mile over the speed limit therefore he is a criminal so being a murderer is a criminal so he's not better

- * Double counting – counting events or occurrences more than once in probabilistic reasoning, which leads to the sum of the probabilities of all cases exceeding unity
- * Equivocation – using a term with more than one meaning in a statement without specifying which meaning is intended - I committed a crime but Rick committed a crime, so they are the same
- * Fallacy of composition – assuming that something true of part of a whole must also be true of the whole. - Rick is bad because some aspect of him is bad
- * Fallacy of division – assuming that something true of a composite thing must also be true of all or some of its parts. - Rick hid information to protect an innocent person, so Rick lies of omission so Rick is a liar

Now if the timing is odd, remember I'd rather rant here and not ya know... get something possibly worse from a pharmacy, so yes the timing of said assaults is exactly designed to make me either 1 choose to take a medication that should be safe as it came from a pharmacy and have a bad result or 2 dare them in public to do something like that, have it magically correct and show my best

Gang stalking, or cases where a number of people could come forward, but no one does are fundamentally a disastrous situation because each participant is blind to the downstream effects of the mere condoning of such actions will have on them. It's the crime equivalent of "not I said the little red hen" - the worst part, is it only works if there's uniformity in compliance and falls apart (quickly even) when the uniform conditions break down. It's an example of amplifying the perceived power of an individual who can only cause harm via indirect actions and briber, blackmail and extortion

I'm here wondering...

When I met Alex at Nyne that night in summer 2022 to take him to his aunts house... the last time we spoke... and he gave me just enough detail of his assault.

One could imagine me being furious, or yelling at him, or blaming him for the years of what he had done behind my back

I forgave him instantly and said the last thing I said to him, words to this day I still regret...

"If you don't go to the police, you'll end up dead"

The next new years I was fielding search for him in NYC and connected the right people to keep him safe

I still live with the guilt that if I had betrayed his trust and used what I knew (would have been an advantage to me for sure) if that would have also saved his life.

But he was (mostly, until the late phase when the assaults, the harassment etc had gotten so bad what did he have to loose?) silent.

It gave space for his assailant to attempt to fill that vacuum with a story of how Alex engaged in risky behavior, drugs, was mentally ill... all to erase the facts he had told others...

Rob Mark assaulted Alex in 2022

He had motive to kill him

He hit him with the comcast remote, followed by his costume Harley Quinn mallet

He had motive to kill him

He hit him with the comcast remote, followed by his costume Harley Quinn mallet

It happened because he was about to hook up with Rob (not uncommon) and because he dared to say that Rob ought to leave me alone

He stood for me in that moment, and it may have taken his life

But the continuous "pascals wager" of believing I'd never let them come to harm, and my and their assailant would means to always do what he says and never as I say is exactly how they will set themselves up for disaster

If other family members don't understand "divide and conquer" is still "and conquer" and therefore helping double down on lies to keep the "divide" is asinine then they in not being convinced, the true failure is a lack of basic reasoning that means they never can be...

And if dealing with things online isn't palatable, perhaps lying and gaslighting to a degree where conflict resolution in private is impossible may have been a poor approach... for us... it's working exactly how it's supposed to for the assailant... note how it's unsolvable until they stop being so dishonest? Might be by design and guess who all loses... so I'll keep telling the truth in public until you get that telling me the truth in private is the only way back for everyone

There's nothing more disgraceful then someone who needs to play unfair, take credit for your achievements, and still complains that the world doesn't see them as a genius... Here's to my ex who will get to live with all the shame of the world knowing that he thought he wasn't good enough... because he had to play by an unfair set of rules and still keeps losing. That's an admission that you know you can't win fair, and you can't even win unfair... The world would have been better if he had never been permitted to walk a free man as long as he has, but I suppose the slow watching of the crumbling of his power and reputation is the best possible justice for Alex as well as a strong admonition against anyone else following down that path...
